25) Paraphrase the following poem.

Remember, no men are strange, no countries foreign Beneath all uniforms, a single body breathes
Like ours : the land our brothers walk upon
Is earth like this, in which we all shall lie. They, too, aware of sun and air and water, Are fed by peaceful harvest, by war's long winter starv'd
Their hands are ours, and in their lines we read
A labour not different from our own. Remember they have eyes like ours that wake Or sleep, and strength that can be won
By love. In every land is common life
That all can recognise and understand

Answer:

The poem emphasizes the unity and shared humanity of all people, regardless of nationality or appearance. It reminds us that beneath the differences in uniforms, we are all the same, breathing the same air and walking on the same earth. Just as we do, people in other countries experience the same natural elements—sun, air, and water—and are nourished by peaceful times or suffer during war. Their hands work in the same way ours do, laboring with no real difference. They have eyes that open and close just like ours, and their strength, like ours, can be fostered by love. The poem calls for recognizing the common life and humanity that unites everyone across the world.

It may stop its flow for a while, but presently the dam will give way, and then the stream will rush on with more force and fury than ever. Conquering by power is like changing a lion; conquering by kindness keeps the lion from doing harm, by changing his nature and turning him into a lamb.

Answer:

The passage contrasts two methods of conquering: by power and by kindness. Conquering by power is temporary, like building a dam to stop water; eventually, the resistance will break through with more force. On the other hand, conquering by kindness brings a lasting change, similar to taming a lion by transforming its nature into that of a lamb. Superstitions: A Misguided Belief Superstitions are irrational beliefs or practices arising from fear, ignorance, or trust in the supernatural, often without logical or scientific basis. Throughout history, people have followed various superstitions related to birds, trees, animals, colors, and numbers. For instance, seeing a black cat is often considered bad luck, while spotting a crow or owl is believed to bring misfortune. Similarly, trees like the peepal are thought to house spirits, and certain numbers, such as 13, are considered unlucky. Despite advancements in education and science, many old superstitions still persist in modern society. People avoid doing important tasks on specific days or wearing certain colors based on these beliefs. Superstitions continue to influence decisions in subtle ways, even though they have no logical or scientific backing. It is essential to recognize the harm superstitions can cause and strive to eliminate them through awareness, education, and reliance on reason and facts rather than irrational fears.
